Headline:
Often cloudy with showers. Becoming colder into the weekend.

Today:
Any early fog patches will clear slowly through the morning. Otherwise it will be rather cloudy, especially in the morning, but with an isolated shower possible. Some sunny intervals developing for the afternoon. Light winds. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Tonight:
Some showers continuing overnight, becoming more frequent later in the night. Becoming largely cloudy with areas of fog developing in light winds. Minimum temperature 2 deg C (36 deg F).

Saturday:
Cloudy, early showers turning to persistent rain especially for southern areas during the morning. This rain then turning mostly to snow during the evening. Winds strengthening, with gales on coasts. Maximum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
A spell of persistent snow is likely on Sunday into Monday, turning more showery with brighter spells on Tuesday. Feeling cold in strong easterly winds, with gales on coasts.
